The 1993 National Concerto Competition sponsored by General Motors and SEVENTEEN Magazine will be held at Interlochen Center for the Arts March 3-9. The announcement was recently made by Interlochen President Dean Boal who is thrilled to have the noted competition a permanent part of the Interlochen experience.

Renamed the General Motors and SEVENTEEN Magazine National Concerto Competition at Interlochen, the event is open to students in grades 9-12 attending school in this country, Canada, Mexico and Puerto Rico, currently studying with a music teacher. The 1993 instrumental categories are: 1) piano 2) violin 3) cello and 4) flute/clarinet/trumpet.

The Grand Prize Winner will receive a $10,000 scholarship for continued musical studies and a performance with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. One winner in each category will receive a $5,000 scholarship. This is a natural marriage of a major competition and Interlochen since both our academy and camp are developing the best young musical talent," said President Boal. "We expect the competition to showcase Interlochen and further the cause of greater good music. We intend to spread our goals and provide a wonderful experience for the winners.

Started in 1982, the National Concerto Competition has been held in the past at several locations including the Eastman School of Music, Northwestern University, Oberlin Conservatory, University of Michigan, Indiana University and the New England Conservatory.

"The competition has a Michigan ring to it and we are pleased with the opportunity to help develop and encourage young musical talent," said Interlochen Arts Camp Director Ed Downing. "It is a wonderful coup for us and we will depend on our big-name entertainers in the Summer season of the Interlochen Center for the Arts to provide a wonderful experience for the winners.

Interlochen Center for the Arts personnel will judge the preliminary cassette audition tapes of recital repertoire. Thirty finalists will be chosen: seven piano, seven violin, seven cello and nine from the category flute/clarinet/trumpet.

A panel of 13 distinguished musicians will adjudicate the competition. Activities will include performances of recital repertoire, a theory examination, lecture/master classes and the Finals Concert. Four finalists, one per category, will perform their concerti with the Interlochen Orchestra, Byron Hanson conducting. A Grand Prize Winner will be selected by the panel of judges.

Official entry forms must be accompanied by a cassette audition tape of the recital repertoire and a $20 nonrefundable application fee. All entries must be postmarked no later than Nov. 16, 1992, and mailed to National Concerto Competition, 850 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10022. For additional information, call Interlochen Center for the Arts, (616) 276-7200.

The Interlochen Arts Academy Graduates

The 1992 class has produced a Presidential Scholar in the Arts, eight National Merit Scholarship finalists, and 15 Arts Recognition and Talent Search (A.R.T.S.) award winners.

Graduates represent 47 states, the District of Columbia, and 14 foreign countries including Russia, China, Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, Puerto Rico and Malaysia.

More than 95 percent of Interlochen graduates go on to college, most attending the college of their first choice. Many of the Interlochen students are going on to some of the nation's most prestigious institutions, such as Eastman School of Music, Oberlin Conservatory, Princeton, Yale University, New York University, Harvard University and the University of Michigan.

Armed with duffle bags, musical instruments, cameras and bug repellant, approximately 1,400 youngsters arrive on campus June 21 for the start of the 65th season of the Interlochen Arts Camp (IAC). For eight weeks, campers from all over the country and the world will participate in a program aimed at developing their skills in the arts.

"We are looking forward to another successful camp season with children here from all 50 states and more than 25 foreign countries," said Ed Downing, Interlochen Arts Camp Director. "Along with our big-name entertainers in the Summer Arts Festival who will appear throughout the summer, there will be about 500 student, faculty and staff concerts, theatre and dance productions and visual art exhibits."

Campers, ages 8 to 18, are given personalized attention by a professional staff and noted faculty with well-known performers invited as visiting instructors to conduct master classes and workshops for students.

Again this year, 53 Governor's Scholars representing each state, Washington D.C., Puerto Rico and France will attend the camp through a scholarship program funded by Emerson Electric Company of St. Louis, Mo.

New Phone and Computer Systems Installed at Interlochen

Interlochen Center for the Arts upgraded two major systems this spring and summer with installation of new telephones and a central computer on campus.

The new center telephone number for the entire institution is (616) 276-7200. The former number 276-9221, will remain in use for at least one year for changeover purposes.

According to Larry Snyder, director of information services, the new system is AT&T's Definity G3-1 and features direct main in use for at least one year.

Chad Rettke, director of computer support, said employees have been busy adjusting to a brand new computer system. In May, the center began the mammoth task of converting from the former IBM system to Digital Equipment Corporation's VAX 4000-300. The new computer is described as an open system which meets industry standards, allowing Interlochen to keep up with "state of the art" computer technology.

"We simply outgrew the former system," said Snyder. "Every office can now receive outside calls without having to go through the switchboard. The new phones provide automatic call back, call forward, call park, call pickup, priority calling and voice mail plus other options."

Interlochen employees have also been busy adjusting to a brand new computer system. In May, the center began the mammoth task of converting from the former IBM system to Digital Equipment Corporation's VAX 4000-300. The new computer is described as an open system which meets industry standards, allowing Interlochen to keep up with "state of the art" computer technology.

"It's expected to be completely functional within a year, the new system will provide electronic mail capabilities, central word processing and access to a master calendar for the institution."

A check from McDonald's Corporation was presented to Interlochen Center for the Arts. President Dean Boal (left) accepted the donation from Michelle Rowe, manager of the U.S. 31 South McDonald's Restaurant in Traverse City. A portion of the $40,000 contribution will be used for scholarships. The Interlochen Arts Academy Orchestra, under the direction of Byron Hanson, performed in Chicago last October at the Awards of Excellence dinner for Ronald McDonald Children's Charities with former president Jimmy Carter in attendance.

Admissions Department Focuses on Academy Enrollment

With a roster of 1,400 youngsters enrolled for the 65th season of Interlochen Arts Camp, the admissions department turns its attention to the 1992-93 academy year.

Thomas Belyew, admissions director, said the academy has just graduated a senior class and there will be over 175 openings for new students in the fall.

"Enrollments in all the academy are ahead of last year at this time by 15 percent and we are currently accepting applications in all areas," he said. "Academy financial aid is still available for all art forms. Areas which typically require recruitment emphasis include: music, particularly low brass (trumpet, baritone horn and tuba), bassoon, violin, viola, percussion and trumpet; dancers (especially male); actors and visual artists."

Belyew said statistics show that over 75 percent of our referrals come from "word-of-mouth." Founded in 1962, the Academy is a fine arts boarding high school, considered by many to be one of the world's most innovative teaching centers and an outstanding presenter of artistic achievement. The school enrolls approximately 400 students in grades 9 through 12 and a postgraduate year. It offers accelerated instruction in music, theater, design and visual arts.

The annual report "contains a unique piece to introduce people to this unique institution and tastefully highlights and commends our students, faculty, staff, trustees, donors and friends," he explained.

The report's "Annual Report 1991 Gets New Look Talcott Search (ARTS) competition. They are Jonathan B. Holland, 18, composer/trumpet major from Miami, FL; Tricia Griesbrodt, 18, horn major from Lexington, NE; and Jessica Bell Smith, 17, creative writing major from Traverse City. The United States Presidential Scholars Program was established in 1964 and in 1979 was extended to recognize students who demonstrate exceptional talent in the visual, creative and performing arts as well as academics.

To date, Interlochen Arts Academy has had 23 Presidential Scholars in the Arts - more than any other high school in the country.

Annual Report 1991 Gets New Look

The Annual Report 1991 for Interlochen Center for the Arts was just recently published and distributed. The 50-page booklet features a unique cover design commemorating the 100th anniversary of-founder Joseph E. Maddy's birth, with financial and general information compiled inside.

"The Annual Report is far more than just a financial report on the institution," commented ICA trustee Gerald Fischer of Minneapolis and president of the University of Minnesota Foundation. "It is an excellent piece to introduce people to this unique institution and tastefully highlights and commends our students, faculty, staff, trustees, donors and friends."

Roger Bell of Bell and Associates, a market/design consultant company of Ohio, and designer Sharen Badeen, spent over three months on the report, working with Interlochen personnel to complete the report.

"We tried to combine two books for the annual report," he explained. "One was corporate and fundraising look, with the other more of a general brochure that was informative and festive."

The Annual Report includes highlights of the past year for the Interlochen Arts Academy, Interlochen Arts Camp, Interlochen Public Radio with accompanying photographs and graphics. Also listed are donors, foundations and corporations who have lent support over the past year.

A total of 5,000 copies of the report were printed and will be distributed by the center.

Challenges

Math Division teaches an innovative program of their own design.

Innovative graphing calculator an important tool in the teaching process as a visual aid for our IAA math instructor and project director. Algebra II classes," said Jerald Murdock, "Algebra II classes have been taught in a new method of teaching the course. Without a doubt, the instructors are teaching its knowledge, no one else has done this.

Almost halfway through the two-year project, a Graphing Calculator Enhanced Algebra Institute will be offered this summer at Interlochen. The Institute is aimed at math teachers from all states who want to learn new methods of teaching math.

Ellen Kamischke, who has been teaching at Interlochen, said some of the students would not like their new method of teaching the course because it requires critical thinking. "This is what the colleges are telling us — kids can't think, they need thinking skills before they can do college-level work."

Needed to do this with algebra before. This is a first."

Math instructors and students alike have been challenged this year as members of the Interlochen Arts Academy Math Division/Innovative program of their own design. "Graphing Calculator Enhanced Algebra" is a totally new approach to teaching algebra to high school students, and the two-year project is made possible by a $50,000 grant from the National Science Foundation.

"The whole idea is based on making a graphing calculator an integral part of the learning process as a visual aid for our Algebra II classes," said Jerald Murdock, IAA math instructor and project director. "To my knowledge, no one else has done this with algebra before. This is a first."

Murdock and Interlochen math instructors, Eric and Ellen Kamischke and Hugh Trepas, are collaborators writing the course. In future years, they plan to teach the course to community college students in support of the graphing calculator approach. "What they learn from this can be applied to anything where analysis is important — like history, English — in every discipline."

Almost halfway through the two-year project, a Graphing Calculator Enhanced Algebra Institute will be offered this summer at Interlochen. The Institute is aimed at math teachers from all states who want to learn new methods of teaching math.

"If everything goes well, our work could be picked up by a publisher who wanted on the CD are performances by Jessye Norman, Andre Watts, Peter Yarrow. A 1955 concert with conductor Maynard Klein with the World Youth Symphony Orchestra and Choir is one of the highlights on the recording. Plans for a newsletter are in the works as the next step in the grant project and possible publication of their work in the book's form."

Memorable Interlochen Music Highlighted on Compact Disc

A collection of memorable music from Interlochen has been assembled on compact disc, spanning 65 years of Interlochen history. Titled Joe Maddy's Interlochen, the CD is the first of its kind produced by Interlochen Center for the Arts and is available to the public.

The 77-minute CD is narrated by television journalist and campus alumni Mike Wallace and includes highlights of concerts dating as far back as 1937 at the Camp and the Academy. "We tried to find the best performances to include on the recording," said David Greenspan, manager of Interlochen's recording services who was in charge of production. "It was an incredible task completed in nine weeks and we had so much material, we could have put out several."

"We're almost there! The Interlochen Annual Fund has already brought in $1,692,000 and we are now over halfway to our goal of $3.1 million."

This tremendous progress and we are thrilled that so many of you have generously contributed this year. But with less than four months left in the fiscal year, we are still looking for $1,406,000 and are working hard to reach this goal before Aug. 31, 1992.

As you know, Interlochen needs operational funds since tuition and fees simply do not cover the cost of running an institution which serves over 2,000 students on 1,200 acres with 450 buildings and a budget of $19 million.
